

SUTHERLAND
A FUGITIVE.

He wanted to have all the bonds returned. Backus then spoke about the trial on the misdemeanor charge, which the jury disagreed. He said that he was also fairly regular in his attendance during the second trial. "I asked him," he went on, "to be sure to attend all the sessions of the court and he promised to do so. He was here when the jury retired Wednesday morning, and was not here when the court was going so that I could send for him when wanted."

It was informed early yesterday morning that he would be at my office at 11 o'clock yesterday. Then the time was changed to 1 o'clock in the afternoon. He failed to appear. I do not know where he is, nor do his friends, so far as I can make out. I have no doubt that he is further out in this matter, and presume that the usual procedure will be followed.

"One of Sutherland's bondsmen called on me yesterday. He was nervous, but in the representation of the friends of Sutherland's friends, I told the bondsmen that he would be all right. There is a possibility that Sutherland has a habit. He may, in fact, turn up yet."

The explanation referred to was a story set afloat by Sutherland's friends that he was on a "sprint" and was ignorant of the whole proceedings. Lawyer Werber, however, declared that Sutherland was well aware of his conviction.

After the trial, the judge was called to the court and the judge was called to the court and the judge was called to the court.

There was a low but significant whistle in court and then profound silence as the clerk called upon the bondsmen to produce the body of Kenneth F. Backus, who had been arrested.

BROOKLYN NEWS.
AFTER MR. FURGUESON
Legislature to Investigate the Inebriates' Home Affairs.

Prompt Action Following "The Evening World's" Exposures.

"Voters" Colonized for the Use of the Bosses.

Word was received from Albany to-day that the Legislature will appoint a committee to investigate the affairs of the Inebriates' Home, of Kings County, the queer institution at Fort Hamilton, which "The Evening World" thoroughly exposed yesterday.

Doss Cornelius Furgueson has nothing to say about the facts and figures presented in "The Evening World." Mr. Furgueson is not talking for publication just now.

It was a surprise to many Brooklyn taxpayers to learn that $60,000 of the city funds is being paid annually to Cornelius Furgueson for the benefit of his inebriates' Home.

Brooklyn citizens have evidently overlooked the law which provided for the establishment of the institution, and some one has been lax in not asserting the city's rights in the matter. The law creating the Home distinctly says:

The Mayor and City Judge of Brooklyn and the county judge of the county of Kings are ex-officio members of the board of trustees. If the Mayor of Brooklyn and the City and County Judges had acted as the law provides and attended the meetings of the Trustees, doubtless the reckless expenses and extravagances as practiced by Treasurer Furgueson, of the "Home," would have been curtailed years ago.

Mayor Schieren and others of the city government of Brooklyn may look into the present state of affairs and give their immediate attention to the drainage of the Kings County funds by the Home.

There are many queer circumstances in connection with the management of the Home, which include the fact that the Mayor of Brooklyn and the City and County Judges had acted as the law provides and attended the meetings of the Trustees, doubtless the reckless expenses and extravagances as practiced by Treasurer Furgueson, of the "Home," would have been curtailed years ago.

COURT AND FOREMAN SPARED.
But the Prisoner's Friends Kissed
Counsel and Jurors.

Anna Wozniowska's Acquittal Officially Appreciated.

LONG ISLAND CITY, L. I., March 16.—There was an unusual scene in the Queens County Court of Sessions this morning when Anna Wozniowska, a Polish girl, sixteen years old, was acquitted upon a criminal charge before Judge Garretson and a jury.

As soon as Foreman Joseph B. Armstrong announced the verdict of "Not guilty" there was a great commotion in the rear of the court-room by a lot of Polish women, friends of the girl.

The girl sat beside Lawyer J. B. Merrill, her counsel. The women rushed into the space occupied by the lawyers in the rear of the court-room, and throwing their arms around Merrill hugged and kissed him. The girl also embraced him.

The crowd then rushed into the jury-box and began hugging and kissing the jurors. The jurors, who were seated in the rear of the court-room, were also embraced by the women.

HIS STRANGE ADVENTURES.
A Circus Man Who Can Relate Pletoreque Stories.

Col. W. W. Parmlee, the veteran circus-manager and animal trainer, is spending his vacation in Minneapolis, and during the past few days, when obliged to travel, he has been entertaining his friends with narrations of his experiences that are worthy of being preserved in an edition of luxury.

He was on the Minneapolis Journal, met on his travels en route from Hildal to Roomahay, India, by a traveling man for Savers Bros., and he had in tow at the time twenty-six lions, four elephants and a humpbacked camel which had been presented to him by the natives as tokens of esteem.

His blood-curdling adventures in Africa, whether he was once banished in company with an orang-utan, and his suffering on the coast of Sahara, he related in a kindly and interesting manner, and his tales of his experiences in the jungles of India, and his adventures in the mountains of the Himalayas, were equally interesting.

HOW TO KEEP SOUND OUT.
Building Devices that Will Secure Perfect Quiet.

There is occasionally a demand for an apartment which is perfectly sound-proof, and this seems to be a difficult problem to solve. The London Engineer gives the following method of attaining this result, and says it is very difficult, as well as costly, unless provision has been made in the course of the construction of the building.

As regards the floor, a ply of very thick carpet felt under the ordinary carpet will, to a certain extent, effect the object in this direction, but to make it really effectual, the proper thing to do would be to lift the floor, and there is not already a counter-floored between the joists, it might answer the purpose to fill in on the top of the joists with three inches of silicate cotton, then on top of each joist a strip of half inch should be laid before nailing down the floor. This will effectually stop the sound in that direction.

As regards the walls, they would require to be treated with vertical studs, say 1 1/2 inches by 1 inch, spaced 18 inches apart; these should be either nailed or bolted to the wall, and the spaces between the lathing and the present plaster should be filled in with cotton wool. It would also be more effectual if the fronts of the studs were provided with a strip of half inch felt, which would be nailed to the wall. Of course, the walls would require to be repapered. The same arrangement should be carried out for the ceiling.

A difficulty, however, arises with regard to the chimneys. There is no method we know of to prevent a certain amount of sound going through from one house to the other. The chimneys are open in winter time, but in the summer time the fireplace can be closed with a sliding door, or cut paper or any ornamental material of that kind, which will prevent the passage of sound in that direction.

HAD LUNCH IN A CAR.

A Story of Two Boston Women and a Lobster.

It was nearing 4 o'clock as the train pulled out of a Northern station, says the Boston Journal. Everybody looked hungry and anxious to have a bite. In one particular car, right in the very front seat of all, were two women. They were seated at a table with a view of the sea. The women were eating a lobster. A faint odor of lobster was in the air. At last it was located. From the front seat, a woman, who was eating a lobster, was heard to remark in a melodramatic voice:

"You can crack the shell in your fist, just so!" (Illustrating.) The woman, who was eating a lobster, was heard to remark in a melodramatic voice: "You can crack the shell in your fist, just so!" (Illustrating.)

A SOLDIER'S GRATITUDE.
Offers to Share Wealth with a Com-
ple Who Nursed Him.

Just after one of the big battles, in which the Union soldiers won a great victory, a number of the wounded were brought to Harrisburg, says the Harrisburg Telegraph. Harrisburg, at that time, had many hospitals in churches, schools and factories, and they were crowded so much that the patriotic citizens volunteered to take the wounded to their houses and care for them as best they could. One of these was William D. Martin, of 31 North Third Street. He had a son in the army, and naturally his heart went out to the sick and wounded comrades.

There was taken to his house a young soldier who was suffering from four bullet wounds and hurt so badly that it was hardly expected that he would recover. Mr. and Mrs. Martin nursed him carefully, ministered to his wants, sent for Dr. Hetherford, the city doctor, to treat him, and in every way made the soldier as comfortable as possible. For a long time there was no improvement, and Dr. Hetherford expressed the opinion that the man would die.

But Mr. and Mrs. Martin would not have it that way. They determined to have the soldier live. For long weeks of nursing, began to improve. He became strong and active and one day came a time for him again to shoulder his gun and go to the front. As he had Mr. and Mrs. Martin's goodly help, with tears in his eyes: "If I live I shall never forget you. You will hear from me again."

Occasionally he would write to him in the army, and when the war ended he returned to his home and began his business affairs, his property, &c. Mr. Martin received letters from his soldier lad, and an occasional inquiry as to his business affairs, his property, &c. Recently, after the lapse of thirty years, came a reward unexpected for Mr. Martin.

The soldier boy he and his wife had nursed back to health and strength has written him a letter telling him that hereafter he shall take no thought for the future so far as finances are concerned. He says he is well and happy, and that he has a good business. He says he has a good business, and that he has a good business, and that he has a good business.
